

Write A Winning Business Plan - The Neatest Trick In The Book

Write A Winning Business Plan - The Neatest Trick In The Book

“Writing a business plan” sounds really tough, and it can be. But there are a number of things the smart entrepreneur can do to make it easier.

For instance, just what kind of stuff you think gets read like this? Imagine pages full of that, with virtually no margins, no paragraph breaks, no breathing room. Lenders, investors and angel investors are confronted with piles of business plans like that every day.

Take a breath. Then lure your reader into the plan with snappy headlines and easy to read formatting.

Do you know why the the big newspapers use headlines? Because it’s the only way anyone will read a story. More to the point, it’s the only way anyone will buy their paper!

Write A Winning Business Plan - The Neatest Trick In The Book

Take a look at your favourite newspaper. Those headlines tell a story. Sometimes they ooze with conspiracy, and once in a while they stand majestic. Your business plan needs to do no less. The headlines and section headings need to draw the reader in, not with an announcement, but with an invitation.

Compare these:

The Executive Team – The Audio Industry – The Advisory Board

with these:

Strong Executive Team is Led by Industry Insider – The Industry that Reinvents Itself – 7 Top Scientists Lead the Advisory Board

So which set are you going to read?

Lenders of all ilks get far too many business plans – certainly more than they can possibly fund. Simply getting your business plan read is a big step in the right direction.

Try this trick. Imagine that you are indeed writing a newspaper, one that competes with another strong paper in your town. What headline would you put on that paper to encourage readers to buy yours, and not the other?

Honesty, of course, is essential. But within that honesty there are a thousand ways to make the same statement. How many ways are there to say that it is spring time?

It is spring · It is April 22 · Lilacs are in bloom · Snow is melting in the hills

And how many ways are there to say that your business idea is a good one?

Write A Winning Business Plan - The Neatest Trick In The Book

· This is a good idea · An innovative approach · A sure-fire winner · A strong contender for funding · A strong team in an equally strong market · Lots of community support · This fills a need in the marketplace · The company draws on the experience of each of its members · Two years of strong growth · Impressive projections

Now jot down some headlines for your company. You may or may not be able to use them. Try first just to jot down every idea, a brain storming session.

Now use the best of those headlines to help structure your business plan. If “Nobel Prize Winner Heads Advisory Board” is your strongest headline, then lead with that story. If “A Prime Location in a Prime Shopping Centre” is your strongest headline, then that is your lead.

Let the strength of the headlines pull your business plan up a notch or two. The power of your business may surprise even you!

Before you actually begin writing, take the time to really look at a good publication. Look at the styling and the use of headlines and sub-headings. Note how the ideas keep a steady flow, with an invitation to read.

Your business plan perhaps won't look like the venerable Financial Times, or any other major publication, but odds are that it will look a whole lot better than most, and it will therefore be read much more readily.

And that, after all, is what you are after!

[Just as a matter of interest, here is a Headline Generator which I have used for the odd advert or blog page <http://seopressor.com/blog-title-generator/> It may not work for you entirely but it could be a good start in the right direction]

[Author Unknown]